Relevance of the research topic

International Relations is undertaking a moment of fundamental changes, in which power correlations in the world arena transition politically, economically and geographically. The relative decline of the main centers of power of the International System inherited from the post- Second World War period represent an opportunity for the rise of emerging economies, assembled in international fora such as the BRICS and the G20. Relieved from the restraints of a Western-dominated international arena, countries of the Global Majority will have more leverage to work bilaterally, without triangulation with obsolete centers power. In this context, countries such as Brazil and Russia have a unique opportunity to build an autonomous political and economic infrastructure to cement bilateral ties and cooperate autonomously towards building a multipolar world.

Both countries are fundamental actors in the International System and architects of the emerging multipolar world. Both countries actively engage in multilateral forums such as the G-20 and coordinate positions in the United Nations -including the Security Council, where Brazil has occupied a non-permanent seat in 2022, therefore within the chronological framework of this research. Bilateral political coordination in multilateral organizations is foreseen in the Plan for Political Consultations for the period 2022-2025, approved by Brazil and Russia during Bolsonaro's administration, under the auspices of the countries' Strategic Partnership¹. Moreover, the dynamics of Brazilian-Russian ties are often reflected in the level of engagement of the BRICS² forum, intensifying or decelerating its performance according to the degree of coordination between Moscow and Brasilia.

Despite eventual political and economic instabilities, Brazil is an emerging power in international relations. With a robust diplomatic tradition³, Brazil is the only Latin American country to have a seat on the table to participate in the resolution of global issues, such as Middle East peace settlement. Moreover, Brazil is a regional leader on nuclear nonproliferation, economic cooperation, environmental issues and a strong candidate to occupy a permanent seat in a reformed Security Council. The relevance of Brazil as an international actor is, therefore, indisputable.

The country went through a turbulent political period, starting with the controversial impeachment of president Dilma Rousseff in 2019 and culminating in the presidency of Jair Bolsonaro (2019-2022), shifting Brazil's international strategy significantly, as well as its image around the globe. It is necessary to understand the impact of the so-called "new Brazilian foreign policy" promoted by Bolsonaro's administration in Brazilian-Russian relations.

Bolsonaro's foreign policy is widely considered to be a rupture in Brazilian diplomatic tradition. However, during Jair Bolsonaro's mandate, an internal political crisis led to a leadership change in the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs (known as Itamaraty) in March 2021. This research sustains that this development had a significant effect on Bolsonaro's foreign policy, bringing it closer to traditional Brazilian diplomatic practice. The leadership change in the Brazilian ministry of Foreign Affairs had immediate effects on Brazilian-Russian relations, which evolved from a period of crisis during the beginning of Bolsonaro's mandate until March 2021, to a period of rebuilding and deepening of relations, from April 2021 until the end of his administration.

The research question

This study intends to answer the following research question: what is the impact of Jair Bolsonaro's administration (2019-2022) on bilateral relations between Brazil and Russia?

This research question entails a debate on the impact that a given administration has on a country's foreign policy. Therefore, we will question the Realist theory⁴ of International Relations, that considers the State as a unitary actor, in which domestic and foreign policy are separated, independent domains.

According to Milani⁵, since Brazil's redemocratization and the approval of the Constitution of 1988 the range of internal actors involved in the foreign policy elaboration and execution have widened, narrowing the gap between domestic and foreign policy. Therefore, it is legitimate to analyze the impact of particular administrations in Brasilia's foreign policy conduct.

While recognizing the capacity that administrations have to impact foreign policy elaboration and execution, this research will also scrutinize how internal institutional mechanisms, (such as the professional bureaucracy of the Brazilian State, especially the Itamaraty), act against abrupt changes in foreign policy course⁶. This will be fundamental to understand how the crisis installed in Brazilian foreign policy in the first period of Bolsonaro's ruling was mitigated by the Itamaraty and other domestic actors and finally reversed in the second period of Bolsonaro's administration. The fundamental dynamic of the Brazilian-Russian relations under Bolsonaro's administration identified in this research, is that of the installment and subsequent overcoming of a diplomatic crisis.

The hypothesis

The main hypothesis of this research is that Jair Bolsonaro's foreign policy had a significant impact in Brazilian-Russian relations. The research sustains that, while the mandate of foreign minister Ernesto Araujo imposed a serious crisis in Brazilian-Russian relations, the term of foreign minister Carlos França was characterized by rebuilding of ties followed by a deepening of relations. The results achieved during Carlos França's period, added to the resources mobilized to overcome the crisis imposed by Araujo, lead to the hypothesis that Bolsonaro's administration overall can be considered as a positive period for Brazilian-Russian relations.

The objective

The research objective is to understand the impacts of the adoption of Jair Bolsonaro's "new Brazilian foreign policy" in bilateral relations between Brazil and Russia (2019- 2022).

⁶ Lima, M. Instituições Democráticas e Política Exterior. Contexto Internacional, 2000. v. 22. n. 2. P- 265-303.

The object and subject

The research object is Brazilian-Russian Relations, while the subject is the evolution of Brazilian-Russian relations during Jair Bolsonaro's administration (2019-2022).

The chronological framework

The chronological framework of the present research is limited to the period from January 2019 until December 2022, which is the interval of the constitutional mandate of Jair Bolsonaro as president of the Federative Republic of Brazil. Within this period, two different foreign ministers served under Jair Bolsonaro: Ambassador Ernesto Araujo, from January 2019 until March 2021, and Ambassador Carlos França, from April 2021 until December 2022. This research considers the change of ministers as a relevant event in Bolsonaro's foreign policy and, therefore will divide Bolsonaro's administration into two period: the first, spanning from January 2019 until March 2021 and the second, covering April 2021 until December 2022.

Research Tasks

Considering the research objectives, the chronological framework and sources available to investigate Brazilian-Russian relations during Jair Bolsonaro's administration, the main tasks outlined are: a) to evaluate the evolution of Brazilian-Russian relations during Bolsonaro's administration; c) to assess the place of Russia in Bolsonaro's foreign policy; d) to analyze how Bolsonaro's foreign policy influenced the dynamics of Brazilian-Russian ties.

In light of the identified shift in Bolsonaro's foreign policy, which has resulted in a notable change of foreign policy course during his tenure, the research also faces the tasks of: e) determining the main periods of Bolsonaro's foreign policy and f) the underlying factors that have precipitated the identified foreign policy changes, both in the domestic and external dimensions.

Theoretical framework and methodology

This research has made extensive use of articles on International Relations theory and method, as described in detail in its first chapter. Since the research is conducted within the field of International Relations, the thesis has engaged in the main ontological debates of this academic area with the support of the Constructivist theory of International Relations. The focus on issues such as the role of leaders and the influence of domestic issues in foreign policy conduct required the opening of “the State’s black box” and the adoption of ideas proposed by scholar Alexander Wendt in his pioneering book *Social Theory of International Relations*⁷.

Furthermore, the Constructivist approach will be critical to assess the role of ideas in foreign policy making. The influence of a leader’s ideas is particularly relevant to address the role of minister of Foreign Affairs Ernesto Araujo in Brazilian-Russian ties. Araujo’s peculiar world view and specific perceptions on the role of Russia in International Affairs were determinant to explain the meaningful deterioration of bilateral ties during his mandate. The works of authors identified with the Liberal school of International Relations, such as Keohane and Goldstein⁸, will also be mobilized to properly assess the role of ideas in world affairs.

In addition, the research adopted a middle-range International Relations theory to support the analysis of Bolsonaro’s foreign policy in particular: Foreign Policy Analysis (FPA). FPA emerged as a significant tool for this research, due to its emphasis on decision-making process, the role of individual leaders and the impacts of domestic policy in international affairs. This area of study in international relations is committed to producing agent-specific research that examines national policy at the highest level and analyzes domestic policy components to clarify foreign policy choices. While maintaining the role of the nation State as the fundamental level of analysis, as noted by Snyder⁹, FPA allows for the study of the psycho-milieu of foreign policy leaders as an essential tool to comprehend their decisions on what is called "foreign policy undertakings", as proposed by authors Harold and Margareth Sprout¹⁰.

Considering that this research assesses the evolution of a specific bilateral relation, within a specific period, it is necessary to adopt adequate historical theories and methods. A particularly valuable tool to undertake this task is the adoption of the French School of History of International Relations, forged by authors such as Renouvin¹¹ and Duroselle¹². These scholars have taken a vital epistemological step in International Relations, surpassing the traditions of diplomatic history and inaugurating the field of History of International Relations, mobilizing categories such as decision-making, culture and material determinants of State action. Through the adoption of the French School's theoretical framework, the examination of Brazilian-Russian relations will move beyond the enumeration of its diplomatic events or meetings at Embassies. The French School allows for encompassing social elements and the impact of the International System in researches dedicated to the history of bilateral ties.

The theoretical and methodological tasks necessary to successfully undertake the present research can be found in its title: "Brazilian-Russian Relations under Jair Bolsonaro's administration (2019-2022)". The word "relations" indicates that the research shall be conducted within the academic field of International Relations, as opposed to history, sociology or economy. This assertion requires an ontological debate on what exactly are the categories studied by International Relations and why they are relevant for this particular research. This debate will be conducted with the support of the Constructivist theory of International Relations in the second section of this chapter.

The reference to "Jair Bolsonaro's administration" infers that a study of Brazilian foreign policy under this particular government will be required. This challenge could be dealt with the support of the Constructivist theory. However, as will be explained below, the particularities of this government, that has heavily relied on values and ideas for policy making, requires the mobilization of the middle-range theory Foreign Policy Analysis (FPA). FPA provides a toolkit for the analysis of foreign policy making, the role of individual leaders and the impacts of domestic policy in international affairs, as will be demonstrated in section three.

Furthermore, the title makes reference to bilateral relations between Brazil and Russia, during a specific historical period (2019-2022). This entails the adoption of a historical approach to International Relations, that mobilizes structural factors to explain bilateral ties. This task will be fulfilled with the aid of the French School of History of International Relations, that has built a robust theoretical framework for studying history in the academic field of International Relations specifically. The integration of the French School to the theoretical framework of this research will be developed in section four of the present chapter.

The fifth session will cover the main methods to be applied throughout the research. The Constructivist approach to International Relations, adopted as the main guidance to undertake systemic analysis, have not been fully successful in assessing the methods necessary to tackle its research agenda. To fulfill this gap, the research will develop on the methods proposed by Foreign Policy Analysis and the French School of History of International Relations, while also mobilizing Discourse Analysis practices.

The main methods used by this research were systemic-historic, as proposed by Tsygankov¹³, allied with tools such as discourse analysis and content analysis. The historical proximity of the period analyzed by this research and its preference for the assessment of human agency did require extensive analysis of speeches, interviews and other official and unofficial textual sources. To guarantee a responsible analysis of these materials, the research will observe the methodological principles proposed by Discourse Analysis tradition, as detailed in chapter one of this thesis. Discourse Analysis can be applied to assess both positivist and interpretivist research tasks. The positivist approach to Discourse Analysis will focus on the motivation of the agents to undertake a given course of foreign policy action, seeking for causal links between discourse and decision-making. In the other hand, an interpretivist approach will focus on the reasons behind the establishment of a given discourse and on investigating why and whether it has become dominant. Throughout the present research, both positivist and interpretivist Discourse Analysis capacities have been applied.

The evaluation of secondary sources

Brazilian-Russian relations are generally cooperative and complex, for it entails intense bilateral and multilateral activities. Therefore, this research made extensive use of secondary sources, such as academic articles, books, monographies and produced mostly, but not exclusively, in the fields of International Relations, History, Sociology and Economy.

The research has applied a set of principles for secondary source selection, such as reliability, peer review and general acceptance by the academic community, defined by the relevance and number of quotations. Reliable secondary sources were defined according to the following criteria: a) the reliability of the author, assessed by his institutional affiliation, scholarly activity and number of quotations by his peers; b) the verification of the author's experience in the subject proposed by the article, attested by his publications list and research records; c) the articles selected were published in credible and influential academic journals, with relevant track record of publications and elevated number of quotations by Brazilian, Russian and/or Western scholars. Finally, the articles selected were published in a chronological framework that were relevant to the objective of the present research, with the exception of secondary sources regarding theory and method of International Relations.

The secondary sources were categorized in three main groups: the first is focused on scholars that specialize in Brazilian Foreign Policy analysis, Brazilian diplomatic history and relations with its main strategic partners. In this group, the research also comprises works of Brazilian, Russian and Western scholars on Bolsonaro's foreign policy. The second group is focused on authors dedicated to Brazilian-Russian relations in particular.

Secondary sources on Brazilian Foreign Policy

Research by Brazilian scholars such as Maringoni¹⁴, Casarões¹⁵, Belém Lopes¹⁶, Pecequillo¹⁷, Lessa¹⁸, Cervo¹⁹ and Bueno²⁰ will provide the base to determine the main pillars of Bolsonaro's Foreign Policy, its elements of continuity and rupture with Brazilian diplomatic tradition. The issue of continuity and discontinuity permeates the literature regarding Brazilian foreign policy, highly influenced by the idea that Brazil has permanent principles of diplomatic action, which remain unchanged, despite governmental variations. This fundamental trace of Brazilian foreign policy studies is credited mostly -but not exclusively- to the works of International Relations scholar and historian Amado Cervo²¹.

According to Cervo, Brazilian foreign policy has amassed a set of conducts and principles throughout its history, which became constant features of its external action²². These constant features provide a significant degree of predictability and continuity to Brazilian foreign policy, providing it with elements of a state policy, as opposed to a government policy²³. The permanent principles of Brazilian foreign policy proposed by Amado Cervo were described and adopted by the present research as a fundamental tool to assess not only the traces of continuity and rupture in Bolsonaro's foreign policy overall, but also the variations within the administration's foreign policy, reflected first and foremost in the change of helm at the Itamaraty from minister Araujo to minister França.

Articles of scholars specializing on Brazilian Foreign Policy were crucial to determine main pillars of Bolsonaro's foreign policy, as well as its position within Brazilian diplomatic tradition. Authors such as Casarões²⁴, Pecequillo²⁵, Hirst²⁶, Maringoni and Berringer²⁷ have suggested that Bolsonaro's foreign policy represents a significant deviation from Brazilian diplomatic practices. The main trace of rupture in Bolsonaro's foreign policy would be his skepticism towards global governance, meaning distrust about the role of international organizations as a mean to solve common challenges. Other indications of rupture are the choice of preferential partners based on ideological alignment, as opposed to pragmatism; forsaking autonomy by adopting an automatic alignment with the United States and, finally, disregard for regional integration projects.

However, while there is a wide perception of Araujo's foreign policy as a rupture in Brazilian diplomatic tradition (Casarões and Faria²⁸, Maringoni²⁹, Berringer³⁰, Schutte³¹, Timofeeva³², Borzova and Martynov³³), Carlos França's foreign policy has been less scrutinized than his predecessor's. Since the end of Bolsonaro's government, there is an increased effort from Brazilian scholars to publish research encompassing this administration's foreign policy as a whole, therefore including Carlos França's mandate in the analysis. A vocal example is the selection of works organized by Maringoni, Marra and Schutte entitled "Pragmatismo irresponsável - Política externa e inserção internacional do Brasil no governo Bolsonaro"³⁴. Nonetheless, the unprecedented ruptures occurred during Araujo's period were still granted far more attention in the analysis, when compared to the low-profile foreign policy of Carlos França.

The eccentric and highly controversial characteristic of Araujo's foreign policy generated perplexity among the significant majority of Brazilian scholars, often obfuscating the analytical quality of the works dedicated to his period. The astonished tone of most works dedicated to the Brazilian foreign policy during Bolsonaro's years have concealed the nuances of the period, leading a number of scholars to dismiss the differences between Araujo's and França's foreign policy conducts. There is a general tendency to brush aside the differences between the two foreign ministers, arguing that, despite modulations in tone, there were no significant changes in foreign policy course.

In the above-mentioned selection of works, Maringoni, Schutte and Marra³⁵ coined the expression "result-driven bolsonarism" to describe Carlos França's approach in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. According to the authors, França's approach was more moderate than his predecessor's, recognizing that he "executed a policy that, besides lacking spark, reduced the close to folkloric aspects of his predecessor and returned rationality to external relations". Nonetheless, the authors declare that França did not imprint significant changes in Bolsonaro's foreign policy, but rather maintained its strategies and ideological preferences.

Since the end of Bolsonaro's government Brazilian scholars are revisiting the administration's foreign policy with less perplexion, adopting a more restrained tone and approach³⁶. In this context, the debate on the continuity and rupture is being revived, to include nuances within Bolsonaro's foreign policy. Pecequilo³⁷ argued that, "despite the fact there indeed there were important ruptures in the national foreign policy during the 2019-2022 period, especially when considering the posture regarding multilateralism and international regimes (that is, regarding global governance as an instrument of international politics), other agendas cannot be detached from the history of international relations, such as the alignment with the US; the nationalistic views regarding climate change and human rights; and the diminished priority for regional integration." Pecequilo goes on to note that a number of traces of Bolsonaro's foreign policy (which this research identifies with França's period) had precedents in Brazilian foreign policy history, especially in periods when "particular coalitions of interest were in power (rural and urban oligarchies, the Armed Forces, the Church, among others) and associated to the military dictatorship of 1964-1985³⁸".

The contribution of Pecequilo is vital to understand that, despite the political preferences of the analyst, a number of elements in Bolsonaro's foreign policy were not unprecedented in Brazilian history and do not deviate from the country's diplomatic tradition. The neoliberal and North-South focus of França's foreign policy has precedents in Brazilian diplomatic action, even after redemocratization. This research identifies most of these precedents as associated to the mandate of Carlos França, while recognizing that Araujo's period did indeed incur in significant ruptures and oddities. The fundamental changes in Brazilian-Russian ties from Araujo's to França's administrations are clear examples of the contrasts between the two minister's approaches.

Belém Lopes, Carvalho and Santos clearly state that Bolsonaro's Brazilian foreign policy does not entail an actual rupture with core historical principles upheld by diplomats and top officials, as he was not able to pull social and institutional levers in order to deliver new policy contents³⁹". After discerning Bolsonaro's controversial foreign policy statements from the actual execution of Brazilian foreign policy during the first years of his mandate, the scholars conclude that “there is much more continuity than foreign policy commentators would be willing to admit”. Despite the will to change Brazilian foreign policy, notably during Ernesto Araujo’s term, the inability of Bolsonaro’s team, added to the lack of international adherence to his agenda, led to the failure to implement most of the president’s foreign policy ideas.

Apart from the continuity and discontinuity debate, another issue of contention among authors specializing in Bolsonaro's foreign policy is its periodization and chronology. Due to its unprecedented level of alignment to the interests of the Donald Trump administration in the United States (2017-2021), scholars such Berringer⁴⁰ have proposed that Bolsonaro's foreign policy should be periodized according to the changes in US leadership. Therefore, Bolsonaro's foreign policy should be divided between a first period, from January 2019 until January 2021, when the White House was led by Donald Trump and a second period, from January 2021 until December 2022, coinciding with the Joe Biden administration. However, the clear importance of the Brazilian-US relations must not shadow the relevance that other topics had in Ernesto Araujo’s demise, such as his troubled relations with China. Brazilian-Chinese relations were a more frequent issue of contention during Araujo’s final hearings at the Senate than Brazilian-US ties. Ernesto Araujo publicly accused senator Katia Abreu, a politician that played a key role in his demise, of promoting his resignation due to his opposition to Chinese endeavors in Brazil, such as the use of Chinese 5G internet connectivity technologies⁴¹.

Despite recognizing the relevance that the change of leadership in the White House had to Bolsonaro's foreign policy, the present research will propose a different periodization. This research recognizes a foreign policy shift in Brazil in 2021, but considers it to be a consequence of the internal political crisis of March 2021, that led to the resignation of the minister of Foreign Affairs Ernesto Araujo. The internal political crisis was generated by the discontent among key Brazilian political and economic actors with Araujo's foreign policy, exacerbated by the perceived inaction of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in tackling the COVID-19 pandemic.

Scholars Borzova and Martynov have contributed decisively to the study of Brazilian Foreign Policy and diplomacy in Russian language. A. Borzova's "Diplomatičeskaja služba Brazili kak instrument realizatsii vneshnei politiki strany (1902-2014)⁴²" (The Brazilian Diplomatic Service as an instrument for the implementation of the country's foreign policy, in a free translation to English) is the only comprehensive work about the Itamaraty, its history, institutional culture, structure and principles of external action published in Russian language. A decisive contribution of Borzova and Martynov for the study of both Brazilian Foreign Policy and Brazilian-Russian relations is given by the innovative "Istoriia Vneshnei Politiki i Diplomatii Brazili"⁴³ (History of Brazilian Foreign Policy and Diplomacy, in a free translation to English). Their work recognizes the difficulties imposed by the domestic political crisis that culminated with the ousting of president Dilma Rousseff in 2016 to Brazilian external action. According to them, the period of 2016 until 2020 was characterized by an atypical deacceleration in Brazilian diplomatic activity⁴⁴, despite the maintenance of activities under the BRICS and G20 forums. However, for their work was published in 2021, the authors unfortunately could not delve upon Brazilian foreign policy under the administration of Jair Bolsonaro as a whole, including the periods of both ministers of Foreign Affairs, Ernesto Araujo and Carlos França.

Relations between Brazil and Russia were comprehensively studied during the years of Brazil's left-wing governments (2003-2016). The focus on Brazilian-Russian relations during the two first administrations of Brazilian left-wing president Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva is comprehensible, since it was indeed a period of great advances in bilateral ties⁴⁵. During Lula's administrations a significant leap in bilateral trade was identified, as well as the advancing of relations in spheres such as space, defense and humanitarian cooperation⁴⁶. Furthermore, the president of the Russian Federation, Vladimir Putin, consummated the first visit of a head of State of Russia to Brazil during Lula da Silva's first mandate, in 2004⁴⁷. In the following year, presidents Lula and Putin signed the Plan of Action for the Strategic Partnership⁴⁸, materializing this heightened status of bilateral ties agreed upon in 2002⁴⁹. Additionally, it was under Lula that Russia and Brazil came together to found the BRICS group⁵⁰, in the Summit of Ekaterinburg, in 2009.

The advances in bilateral ties during those years led to a widespread belief that Russia had more affinity with left-wing governments not only in Brazil, but in Latin America in general⁵¹. It is important to study how the relations unfolded under the leadership of Jair Bolsonaro's right-wing government and put the above-mentioned assumption to test. The result of the inquiry clarified that Brazilian-Russian relations were not dependent on the Brazilian left-wing and were able to develop with different ideological and political groups within the country⁵².

A key issue to be debated is whether Bolsonaro's foreign policy presented an obstacle for the development of Brazilian-Russian ties. Main authors debating this issue in Russia are Okuneva, L., Martynov, B., Simonova, L. and Davydov, V. These authors have proposed⁵³ that since 2016, Brazil has been living under a "new political cycle", during which new priorities were established for its foreign policy.

According to the above-mentioned scholars "the impeachment of Dilma Rousseff [2016] initiated a crisis in the political system. The subsequent victory of Jair Messias Bolsonaro in the general elections of 2018 [...] in practice initiated a new political cycle, accompanied by a change in development priorities both in domestic and foreign policy of the country, which, ultimately, may affect the nature of relations with Russia and other BRICS member countries". In this context, these Russian scholars noted that "in the foreseeable future, it will be quite difficult for Russia to establish mutual understanding with Brazil, especially in the field of foreign policy".

Another argument posed by the above-mentioned Russian scholars is that, during the Brazilian "new political cycle" the role of non-State actors will be fundamental to the development of ties between Brazil and Russia: "it is of particular importance to establish contacts between key representatives of the national entrepreneurial elite", argued the scholars. Additionally, "common conservative values can play a positive role⁵⁴".

The research attests that these scholars were correct in foreseeing the relevance of non-State actors to maintain bilateral ties during the crisis periods. The research disclosed that the role of non-State actors in bilateral ties have expanded from 2019 until 2022. The most vocal example is the increased role of institutions like the Brazilian-Russian Business Council, that was key to maintain ties during the first period (January 2019 until March 2021) and stimulate rebuilding during the second period (April 2021 until December 2022).

International Relations scholar Cull⁵⁵ has developed on the role of non-state actors in International Relations and the importance of informal networks to the maintenance of bilateral ties. These networks can be maintained, even when formal diplomatic relations deteriorate or go through a crisis period. In such periods, these informal networks are activated to maintain essential contacts and might eventually work to overcome the crisis, by helping rebuild official ties between their governments⁵⁶. This is precisely what happened in the Brazilian-Russian case: during a period of crisis in the highest diplomatic levels, business elites reinforced contacts to avoid a greater setback in bilateral ties. After the resignation of Araujo, the Itamaraty could count on the business elite's network as a stepping stone towards rebuilding relations and, subsequently, deepening ties. The above-mentioned Russian scholars also accurately predicted the increasing role of values in bilateral relations.

Contrasting with the lively scholarly debate on the issue of Brazilian foreign policy under Bolsonaro, articles on Brazilian-Russian relations during this period are surprisingly rare. The research identified an almost absence of academic works on the evolution of Brazilian-Russian ties during Bolsonaro's government. Notable exceptions are L. Okuneva⁵⁷, M. Bezerra⁵⁸, Y. Timofeeva⁵⁹ and M. Khvan⁶⁰. Nonetheless, these works focused whether in one particular event of Brazilian-Russian relations (such as Bolsonaro's state visit to Moscow in February 2022, as in the case of Okuneva), or in the first period of Bolsonaro's foreign policy, mainly Ernesto Araujo's mandate. Yakovlev has included events of the Bolsonaro administration in his broad assessment of the evolution of Brazilian Russian Strategic Partnership, although without singling out the peculiarities of Bolsonaro's administration, as opposed to his predecessors⁶¹.

Furthermore, Martynov and Borovsky have elaborated on Russian-Brazilian ties within the wider context of Russian-Latin American relations in their recent monography “Two Americas in contemporary International Relations (1991-2023)⁶²”. Jeifets and B. Jubran⁶³ have greatly contributed in assessing Brazilian-Russian relations within the BRICS forum, as have Astakov and Astakova⁶⁴.

While there are many Brazilian scholars that study Russian history and Russian foreign policy, research on the Brazilian-Russian relations⁶⁵ are, unfortunately, rare. There have been very few works in this area, notably after 2016⁶⁶. We can mention Mielniczuk⁶⁷ and Segrillo⁶⁸ as scholars that have developed a consistent study in this area. Recently, Bandeira da Silveira⁶⁹ has developed briefly on Brazilian-Russian relations under Bolsonaro in works dedicated to bilateral ties in the post-Cold War period. Nonetheless, no comprehensive study has been conducted in Brazil regarding Brazilian-Russian ties under Jair Bolsonaro's administration (2019-2022) to this day.

Sporadic research has been done in Russia on bilateral cooperation in the fields of tourism⁷⁰, culture⁷¹, language⁷², business⁷³, scientific cooperation⁷⁴ and media⁷⁵. It must be noted, however, that most of these works are descriptive and do not provide innovative findings to the analysis of Brazilian-Russian bilateral relations in particular. Moreover, a significant part was published before 2016, preceding not only the beginning of the Brazilian "new political cycle", but also outside of the chronological framework of the present research (2019-2022).

Evaluation of Primary Sources

The above-mentioned issues could be studies basing on different primary sources groups, selected according to the principle of reliability. The scrutinized documents were categorized in seven groups, namely: 1) published official documents, further subcategorized into Brazilian official documents, Russian official documents and documents published by International Organizations; 2) unpublished official documents; 3) speeches of government officials relevant to Brazilian-Russian relations; 4) trade, social and economic statistics provided by official sources; 5) mass-media articles and social media material; 6) documents published by non-governmental organizations; 7) interviews with public and private officials involved in the development of Brazilian-Russian ties and 8) private documents.

The first group of primary sources comprises published official documents of State institutions. These documents were essential to determine the main aspects and the place of Russia in Bolsonaro's foreign policy, as well as to assess its results. Official documents will guarantee the assessment of how Bolsonaro's foreign policy is executed not only in theory, but also in practical terms.

Documents of the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs were be crucial to determine the impact of Bolsonaro's foreign policy in relations between Brazil and Russia. The "Concórdia" database of the Ministry was a useful tool that provided access to agreements signed between Brazil and foreign countries, including Russia. For example, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs database provided the research with the full text of the Plan for Political Consultations between Brazil and Russia (2022-25), signed during the meeting between ministers Sergei Lavrov and Carlos França, in Moscow, November 2021⁷⁶.

The Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs also publishes an annual Management Report ("Relatório de Gestão"), containing fundamental aspects of the activities of the Itamaraty. The issuing of annual Management Reports addressed to the Federal Court of Accounts (Tribunal de Contas da União) is mandatory for most government agencies in Brazil, in an effort to increase public transparency. The reports are not only a relevant source of information on bilateral relations with Russia, but also of administrative changes in the Itamaraty, which reveal the priorities of each minister's mandates. This research has analyzed not only the Management Reports of 2019, 2020, 2021 and 2022⁷⁷, but also of the preceding years, in order to assess disruptions and continuities in the ministry's works.

Reports and technical notes of the Institute of Applied Economic Research (IPEA), an institution that provides subsidies for the Executive branch of government, were frequently used due to its timely assessment of pressing issues for Brazilian decision-makers⁸³.

Moreover, the Transparency Portal operated by the Comptroller General of the Union of Brazil (Controladoria Geral da União) provided fundamental information for the present research. It is worth noting the extensive database regarding public official international travelling schedules, which allowed this research to access all the official trips made by Brazilian federal government officials to Russia in the studied period⁸⁴. Documents of the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs⁸⁶, as well as the State Duma⁸⁷, the Russian Ministry of Interior⁸⁸ and other organs involved with Brazil-related projects between 2019 and 2022, were also relevant to analyze the Russian reception and reaction to Jair Bolsonaro's foreign policy. Documents published by the Russian presidency, such as the Conception of Russian Foreign Policy of 2016⁸⁹, were also valuable sources for the present research. State organs from the Judiciary⁹⁰, such as the Prosecutor-General of Russia, will also figure in our research, since it has signed cooperation treaties with Brazil in the period scrutinized, such as the Memorandum of Cooperation between the Prosecutor-General's Office of the Russian Federation and Brazil⁹¹.

Furthermore, the research has relied on official documents published by international organizations, particularly by the United Nations⁹⁸, its Security Council⁹⁹ and the Organization of American States¹⁰⁰. By using the mechanisms of this law, this research was granted access to unpublished diplomatic correspondence between the Brazilian Embassy in Moscow and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs (SERE, in the Portuguese acronym) of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Brasilia. These documents are part of the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs archives. The research had access to over 80 diplomatic communications that, despite being

Regarding the Itamaraty, the Alexandre de Gusmão Foundation of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Brazil has assembled ministers Ernesto Araujo and Carlos França most notable speeches chronologically¹¹⁴. In the case of Ernesto Araujo, the Foundation has published a book entitled “Política Externa: Soberania, Democracia e Liberdade¹¹⁵” (“Foreign Policy: Sovereignty, Democracy and Freedom”) compiling not only his allocutions, but also relevant interviews. Speeches often referenced in the present research were Araujo’s and França’s inauguration speeches, delivered in January 2nd, 2019, and April 6th, 2021, respectively; speeches at the ceremony of graduation of new diplomats, delivered by Araujo in May 3rd, 2019, and by Carlos França in September 1st, 2021¹¹⁶; yearly assessment of their own performances, delivered by Araujo in December 13th, 2019, and by França in September 10th, 2021¹¹⁷; speeches at the meetings of ministers of foreign affairs of the BRICS, delivered by Ernesto Araujo in September 4th, 2020, in Rio de Janeiro, and delivered by Carlos França in June 1st, 2021, in a virtual format.

Another important source of this research was the frequent, lengthy and meticulous hearings that both ministers of Foreign Affairs were submitted to in the Commissions of Foreign Relations and National Defense of the Brazilian Senate and its analogue at the Lower Chamber of Congress. During these hearings the ministers often exposed new information to the public, detailed their foreign policy views in a wide range of issues, while also being repeatedly challenged by law makers, therefore engaging in lively debates. A particular relevant case was Araujo's hearing at the Senate in March 2021, which exposed the high degree of political animosity he was subject to in the Legislative, contributing significantly to his resignation. Besides, the repeated hearings of Carlos França in both chambers of Congress¹¹⁸ to explain the Brazilian position regarding the Ukrainian conflict¹¹⁹ were fundamental sources of information for the present thesis.

The fourth group comprises statistics on Brazilian and Russian commercial and economic data. Considering that Brazilian foreign policy has economic development as a permanent goal, economic and trade data are regularly analyzed to assess the successes and failures of diplomatic strategies. The present research also relies on economic and trade data to evaluate foreign policy results, particularly extracted from Brazilian and Russian official databases. Examples are: the Comex Stat¹²⁰ database on flows on tradable goods, provided and updated by the Brazilian Ministry of Development, Industry, Trade and Services and its Special Secretariat for Foreign Trade and International Affairs and the Comex Vis¹²¹ database, also coordinated by the Brazilian Ministry of Development, Industry, Trade and Services Economy, that provides graphics and other visual aids to analyze Brazilian trade

The fifth group consist of media articles published by major media outlets. Analysis of media and social media interactions were necessary not only due to the historical proximity of the research, but also to access declarations and interviews provided by high-profile diplomatic and political authorities. Furthermore, Jair Bolsonaro's communication team has made wide use of social media and platforms to communicate with his electoral base, often circumventing official channels. Therefore, it was not uncommon for relevant foreign policy decisions to be publicized exclusively through social media channels, designed for specific groups within Bolsonaro's electoral base.

Before assessing the media sources used in this research, it is important to emphasize some media sources used to scrutinize the worldview and International Relation conceptions of minister Ernesto Araujo. As an individual engaged in the propagation of his ideas, Araujo was particularly active on social media. Prior to his nomination as minister of Foreign Affairs, Araujo wrote several pieces in scholarly journals, as well as on his own blog "metapolitica," all dully examined in this study. Carlos França's approach was less focused on public relations, although he did publish opinion articles in the website Interesse Nacional¹²⁶ (National Interest), coordinated by the think-tank Institute of International Relations and Foreign Trade (IRICE, in the Portuguese acronym).

Following his resignation as minister, Araujo has temporarily left his duties as a diplomat in the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The former minister, relieved of his state obligations, has been very public about his experience in charge of the Itamaraty, recalling details and evaluating his performance in public interviews¹²⁷ and in his own YouTube channel "Logopolitica". The information provided by Araujo, which was carefully examined to produce the current research's findings, offers an intriguing window into his assessment of Brazilian-Russian ties throughout his tenure.

As noted above, president Bolsonaro himself also made extensive use of social media and internet platforms to communicate with the public¹²⁸. The almost daily live transmissions that Bolsonaro conducted in his YouTube channel, often accompanied by ministers and lawmakers, provided an important source of information to assess the president's thinking on foreign policy issues¹²⁹.

In relation to the media sources utilized in this study, the chosen articles were published by media outlets authorized to perform journalistic duties, in accordance with Brazilian or Russian laws. Media outlets were further subdivided into a) international news agencies, b) government or public-sponsored media, c) Brazilian media outlets and d) Russian media outlets.

Moreover, media materials whose authorship can be identified were given preference, for the heightened accountability of news articles signed by its elaborators. It is worth noting the works of particular journalists, whose works were relevant or International news agencies whose coverage of the Brazilian-Russian relations were relevant to the present research are the Associate Press, Bloomberg News, and Reuters. Government of public-sponsored media outlets will comprise the Agence France-Presse, Agência Brasil, BBC, China News Service, Russian News Agency TASS, Xinhua News Agency and the news agency MIA Rossiya Segodnya, especially its Portuguese-language branch, Sputnik Brasil.

The Brazilian media outlets scrutinized throughout this research were Brasil de Fato, Carta Capital, Correio Brasiliense, CNN Brasil, DefesaNet, Estado de São Paulo, Folha de São Paulo, Jornal do Brasil, Nexo, Le Monde Diplomatique Brasil, O Globo, Piauí, portal G1, portal UOL, Veja, Valor Econômico, among others. Russian media outlets that have covered Brazilian-Russian relations since 2019 are Izvestiya, Krasnaya Zvezda, Kommersant, Komsomolskaya Pravda, Lenta.ru, Moskovskaya Pravda, Moskovsky Komsomolets, Nezavisimaya Gazeta, RBK daily and Vedomosti.

The sixth group comprises documents of non-governmental organizations. These materials were crucial to assess the influence of non-State actors in Brazilian-Russian relations, particularly during its crisis period in Ernesto Araújo's term. Non-governmental organizations can be further subdivided in a) Reports and declarations emitted by business associations and business interest groups¹³⁴, b) Reports, data and declarations published by private and State-owned companies¹³⁵ c) material produced by business, forums engaged in issues concerning Brazilian-Russian relations¹³⁶.

The most relevant business forum for developing bilateral relations during Bolsonaro's administration was the Russian-Brazilian Business Council, that for a significant period of the present research was headed by the CEO of the Russian producer of fertilizers Phosagro, Andrey Guriev, and by the CEO of the Brazilian meatpacking company Marfrig, Marcos Molina. In order to foster mutually beneficial cooperation between the countries' business elites and safeguard their interests when interacting with governmental and commercial structures, the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the Russian Federation established the Russian-Brazilian Business Council in 2004. The Council has issued a report presented to the Brazilian president, Jair Bolsonaro during his official visit to Moscow, in February 16th, 2022. In the event, Bolsonaro awarded Andrey Guriev with the Rio Branco honorific order, attesting for the relevance of his activities to Brazilian-Russian ties. The council's activities are sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the Russian Federation¹³⁷.

The seventh group consists of interviews with government officials, diplomats and relevant personalities to the Brazilian-Russian ties between 2019 and 2022. Interviews available for the present research include: minister of Defense of Brazil from 2021-2022, Walter Braga Netto; minister of Mines and Energy from 2019-2022, Bento Albuquerque; Ambassador of Brazil to Russia Rodrigo Baena Soares (2021 until present); president of the Brazilian Association of Beef Exports (ABIEC) Antonio Jorge Camardelli; president of the Brazilian Association of Animal Proteins (ABPA), president of the Brazilian Association for Development of Nuclear Activities (ABDAN) Celso Cunha; former Executive-Secretary of the Consortium

The research also made use of private documents, classified in an eight group of primary sources. The particular case is that of the letter of renunciation sent from Ernesto Araujo to president Jair Bolsonaro, in March 29th, 2021. The letter was published by the diplomat in his social media and made available to the public. In this document, Araujo explains the rationale behind his resignation to the president and expresses frustration over “the frontally adverse currents” and “false and hypocritical narrative” that, motivated by “vested national and international interests” made it impossible for him to continue “working for our ideals”¹³⁸. The document was fundamental to assess the relations between these two relevant leaders for Brazilian foreign policy and Brazilian-Russian relations.

Original scholarly research contributions to the subject field

The primary and secondary sources selected for the present research guarantee a relevant scholarly contribution. This research is the first to comprehensively analyze Brazilian-Russian relations under Jair Bolsonaro’s administration. This study contributes to the scholarly debate by identifying the impact of this foreign policy in relations between Russia and Brazil and describing the place of Russia in Bolsonaro’s diplomatic action.

The research also contributes to the study of Brazilian Foreign Policy, as it identified elements to establish that Bolsonaro’s foreign policy underwent a significant change in March 2021, when minister of Foreign Affairs Ernesto Araujo resigned his post. Contrary to other Brazilian Foreign Policy analysts, this research sustains that Araujo's successor Carlos França imprinted significant changes to Bolsonaro's foreign policy. Therefore, this research innovates when proposing a chronology to the study of Brazilian Foreign Policy under Bolsonaro, dividing it in two periods: the first extending from January 2019 until March 2021, the second from April 2021 till December 2022.

The research has established a particular interpretation of Bolsonaro's foreign policy, questioning the widespread belief that it represents an unprecedented rupture with Brazilian foreign policy tradition. This study has identified enough nuances in Bolsonaro's foreign policy to establish that, while ruptures were made during the mandate of Ernesto Araujo in the helm of the Itamaraty, his successor Carlos França has conducted a foreign policy that is in tune with Brazilian tradition. This correction of course in Bolsonaro's diplomacy had significant influence in the dynamics of Brazilian-Russian ties during his mandate.

As a result, the research determined the main dynamic in the evolution of Brazilian-Russian ties under the administration of Jair Bolsonaro: a significant crisis in the first period (January 2019 until March 2021), followed by a period of rapprochement and deepening of relations in the second period (April 2021 until December 2022). The research also identified the strengthening of networks of non-State actors during the first period, that guaranteed the maintenance of relations at an acceptable level. This network has contributed significantly to the rebuilding of relations under Carlos França and almost achieving the mark of US$ 10 billion in bilateral trade in 2022¹³⁹— a goal established by Brazil and Russia under the auspices of the Strategic Partnership agreements in 2002. Taken as a whole, Bolsonaro's administration can be considered a turbulent but productive moment for Brazilian-Russian relations.

Moreover, the selection of non-governmental documents and reports, particularly those of private companies and the Russian-Brazilian Business Council, shed light to a lesser studied side of these bilateral ties: the influence of non-State actors and its role in maintaining relations during periods of crisis. The research will be the first to scrutinize official documents, meeting records and reports by the Brazilian-Russian Business Council elaborated during Jair Bolsonaro's visit to Moscow, between 15th and 17th of February, 2022.

The study also provides novel material on the Brazilian diplomatic position regarding Russia's special military operation starting in February 24th, 2022, by carefully analyzing Brasilia's voting records at the UN throughout that year. The research also mapped the Brazilian response to the above-mentioned event in a series of multilateral organs, identifying the main patterns and principles of the country's response to this relevant geopolitical event.

Furthermore, the research brings to light unpublished archive documents that have not yet been analyzed by scholars. The access to documents of the archives of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Brazil illuminate the main themes of Brazilian-Russian relations and reveal eventual obstacles for further developing bilateral relations¹⁴⁰.

The research also scrutinized in detail official documents emitted by both Brazilian and Russian governments in its original versions, without recurring to translations by third parties. The same is true for the study of secondary sources by Brazilian and Russian authors, all read in their original versions. The ability to work with both Portuguese and Russian languages enhanced the reliability of the sources and the credibility of the interpretation of first and secondary sources.

Summary of the findings and conclusions

1) Brazilian-Russian relations under Jair Bolsonaro's government have experienced the following dynamic: a deep crisis during Ernesto Araujo's mandate as minister of Foreign Affairs (January 2019 until March 2021), followed by a rebuilding period and deepening of relations under his successor, Carlos França (April 2021 until December 2022).

¹⁴⁰ Brasil, Ministério das Relações Exteriores. Telegram nº: 00645, from BRASEMB MOSCOU to SERE (...)

2) The crisis period was installed due to the particular world view espoused by minister Ernesto Araujo, affiliated to the ideas of Brazilian philosopher Olavo de Carvalho. Araujo's conviction that Russia is an expansive power, engaged in establishing a world communist hegemony in partnership with China made him reluctant to engage with Moscow. Two other elements contributed to Araujo's skepticism towards Russia: his aim to align Brazilian foreign policy to the external objectives of the Donald Trump administration in the US and his strong opposition to the left-wing government in Venezuela -which he considered to be a Russian-Chinese satellite in Brazil's neighborhood.

3) Ernesto Araujo's negative perception of Russia was not necessarily shared by other relevant groups in Bolsonaro's administration, nor by specific segments of the Brazilian business elite, or by Araujo's peers inside the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In order to avoid a greater setback, these groups engaged in a series of strategies to mitigate the influence of Ernesto Araujo's ideas in Russian-Brazilian ties. The damage control strategies identified were: a) avoiding the regionalization of the bilateral agenda, by refraining to include divisive issues such as Venezuela and the Bolivian crisis of 2019 in the bilateral agenda b) focusing on economic and commercial issues, considered pragmatic issues, sheltered from political influence and c) maintaining institutionalized relations, for example, the periodic political consultations meetings, provided for in the pre-existing Strategic Partnership agreement signed in 2002 between the parties.

4) The leadership vacuum in Brazilian-Russian relations left by Araujo and, therefore, by the higher echelons of the Brazilian ministry of Foreign Affairs, was fulfilled by non-State actors, particularly by business elites. The most vocal example is the rise of the Russian-Brazilian Business Council, whose activities contributed greatly to maintain bilateral ties. This research has identified and described the role of the "Guriev diplomacy" in the Russian side (a reference to the president of the Russian-Brazilian Business Council and CEO of fertilizers producer Phosagro, Andrey Guriev), which was mirrored by the Brazilian "fertilizers diplomacy" in 2022. The strengthened role of non-State actors not only prevented further setbacks in Brazilian-Russian relations under Araujo, but also guaranteed a relatively quick rebuilding and deepening of ties under Carlos França.

5) Ernesto Araujo's world view, which entailed a uncooperative approach and disengagement from Brazilian-Russian relations, led to widespread domestic discontent with his foreign policy course and, eventually, to his resignation. Araujo's subordination of pragmatic interests to a foreign policy agenda focused on values generated strong domestic opposition, eventually forcing him to resign due to increased pressure from the National Congress. Araujo's resignation can be considered an overdue realization from different economic and social groups in Brazil that the values-based, messianic foreign policy conducted by the minister did not meet the complex, multi-leveled national interests of Brazil.

6) The domestic crisis that led to the resignation of Araujo revealed the urgency of including the demands of specific social groups into Bolsonaro's foreign policy agenda, such as the export agenda of the agribusiness sector, the technological international cooperation demands of the Brazilian military and the urge to go back to multilateral diplomacy manifested by the Itamaraty's diplomatic bureaucracy. In order to successfully include these domestic demands in his foreign policy agenda, president Bolsonaro nominated the career-diplomat Carlos França to succeed Araujo.

7) This research found minister Carlos França's approach to be in tune with Brazilian diplomatic tradition, according to the constant principles of Brazilian foreign policy proposed by scholar Amado Cervo. Therefore, Carlos França's foreign policy constitutes a rupture with the practices of his predecessor, particularly by reducing the role of ideas and values in Brazilian diplomatic practice. Nonetheless, traces of continuity can be identified, providing Bolsonaro's foreign policy with unity, despite the change of leadership in the Itamaraty. The clear preference for North-South cooperation in detriment of South-South, including by sidelining political and social regional integration processes; the focus on trade liberalization and open regionalism; and the goal to join the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) are examples of continuity between Araujo and França.

8) Nonetheless, Carlos França's foreign policy represented a departure from Ernesto Araujo in strategic terms, considering the lowering of the role of ideology, restoring pragmatism, reinserting Brazil in the main international organizations and global governance, while rebuilding key-bilateral partnerships for the country, including rekindling the Strategic Partnership with Russia.

9) The prevalence of contrasts between Araujo and França led this research to propose a specific periodization of Bolsonaro's foreign policy, dividing it into two periods: the first, under minister Araujo (from January 2019 until March 2021), and the second, under minister França (from April 2021 until December 2022).

10) The relevant adjustments made in Brazilian Foreign Policy under Carlos França had significant impacts on Brazilian-Russian relations, which first entered a period of rapid rebuilding and then experience a deepening of ties. Strong indicators of the rapprochement with Russia promoted by França were his personal visit to Moscow in November 2021, the convening the second main bilateral Commission provided for in the Strategic Partnership agreement (the Brazilian-Russian Intergovernmental Agreement for Economic, Commercial, Scientific and Technological Cooperation, or CIC, in the Portuguese acronym) and, finally, president Jair Bolsonaro's State Visit to Moscow in February 2022.

11) The evolution of Brazilian-Russian relations during Carlos França's administration was greatly determined by the strategic importance of the fertilizers trade for bilateral ties. The relevance of the fertilizer's agenda stems from the strengthening of the influence of business elites in bilateral relations occurred during Araujo's mandate. Other key issue in bilateral ties under França is the Brazilian interest in cooperation with Russia in the field of nuclear technology, not only for energy production, but also for the development of the Brazilian Navy's project to build a nuclear-powered submarine.

12) The aggravation of the Ukrainian conflict in February 24th, 2022 brought challenges to Brazilian-Russian relations. The diplomatic position adopted by Brazil during Jair Bolsonaro's administration was one of impartiality, focused on four main directives: 1) condemning hostilities; 2) advocating against the diplomatic isolation of Russia; 3) noncompliance with economic sanctions and 4) maintaining channels of dialogue with Moscow open.

13) The research has shown that the Brazilian position regarding the Ukrainian conflict, both bilaterally and multilaterally, can all be framed within Amado Cervo's constant principles of Brazilian Foreign Policy and, therefore, lay within Brazilian diplomatic tradition. Therefore, the Brazilian foreign policy choices regarding the Ukrainian conflict should come as no surprise to international actors and could have been predicted by attentive observers.

14) The Brazilian position of impartiality regarding the Ukrainian conflict and its diplomatic choice to keep the pace of bilateral relations with Russia in both the political and economic spheres after the eruption of the security crisis in February 2022 led to strong results in the trade area, reaching an overall US$ 9.812 billion in exchanges -a 34,7% year-on-year increase. The performance of Russian exports to Brazil in 2022 was the best in the history of bilateral relations and far exceeds the annual average of US$ 2.74 billion between 2011 and 2020.

15) Despite the accomplishments, Brazil and Russia failed to achieve a professed bilateral goal, that was to convene the Brazilian-Russian High-Level Cooperation Commission (CAN, in the Portuguese acronym), after a seven-year gap. This Commission is the main forum to develop the strategic partnership between Brazil and Russia, according to the Action Plan of the Strategic Partnership signed by the parties in May 2010. Thus, while Brazil did not refrain from celebrating in-person contacts in the ministerial level in the sidelines of multilateral meetings, as in the case of BRICS, G-20 and the UNGA after the events of February 2022, Brasilia adopted a more cautious approach in celebrating high-level in-person meetings in the strictly bilateral level, as would have been the case of convening of the CAN.

16) Overall, Jair Bolsonaro's administration can be considered a relative positive moment for Brazilian-Russian relations, due to the following elements: a) it proved that Brazilian-Russian relations can continue its pace during right-wing democratic governments in Brazil; b) it has proven that bilateral relations can endure periods of crisis; c) the period of crisis has strengthened the ties among non-State actors, guaranteeing another relevant layer of contact networks for Brazilian-Russian ties; d) the period added in bilateral confidence, for Brazil has shown long-term commitment to its relations with Russia by resisting pressure and maintaining an impartial position during a decisive moment for Moscow's security, namely the escalation of the Ukrainian conflict in 2022; e) new issues were added to the agenda, including highly sensitive ones, such as the cooperation on the testing of the nuclear fuel for the Brazilian Navy's development of its first nuclear-powered submarine and f) bilateral trade has increased in volume, enhancing the weight of pragmatic interests in bilateral relations, contributing to its solidity and long-term stability.

17) Nonetheless, Brazilian-Russian ties have failed to overcome structural limitations of relations during Bolsonaro's administration, such as the lack of contacts among the countries civil societies and low engagement between mainstream social groups of both countries; the high concentration of trade relations in a limited range of products and economic sectors, with low incidence of higher-aggregated valued products and near absence of exchanges in the service sector.
